"What were a bandful of backwoods men, uncouth and undisciplined, to these trained butchers and cunning savages?"
So they started out full of confidence that they, who had captured Ticonderoga and Skenesboro and met nothing but victory in their triumphant march southward, would just wipe out these mountaineers and erase from existence the little village of Bennington.

Here on a hilltop. in the yard of the State Arms House, still standing, were stored the supplies.

A little way below it on the left stood the "Catamount House," the only tavern in the place. This was the rendezvous of the lion hearted men of the town, who met and discussed ways and means to assist their country in the hour of need. Gen, Stark and a company of New Hampshire millilia were stationed here at the time guarding the stores, but they were inefficient to battle with 500 Hessians and a horde of savages, and so, hearing of the advancing enemies, they called a council of war.

What were they to do, this handful of unskilled men? To think was to act. No time was to be lost. Berkshire was only twenty miles away and there were other men ready to do and dare.

It is big enough to kill the Cardiff Giant should he ever rise from his stony sleep and must have been sufficiently sharp to slash and cut cruelly 111 years ago. Notwithstanding the fact that it belonged to the enemy and doubtless caused many a brave soul to leap into erernity, we could not but admire the courage of him who must have wielded it in many a battle and the thickest of the fight to leave its edge nicked like a saw, from the clashing of Yankee biades. It is a heavy affair, with an iron guard to the brass bilt, and a leathern scabbard. A quaint camp kettle of Baum's and several cannon balls picked up after the battle, with a bomb-shell that was found over a hundred years after in the same place, served to bring before our minds the practical and terrible side of the server is the server.

Stopping in his sermon he said: "Brothers, there is a time to pray and a time to fight. This is the time to flight, and I am going to fight." Long live his memory. The fighting parson wrote his name in history that day and his words will last while the United States is a Rejubic.

Away over the mountains they sped at their country's call, hardly waiting to say good bye to home and loved ones—to some of whom it was forever—so anxious were they to meet the foe, and Pittsfield crowned herself with laurel. They arrived here after several hours of fatiguing march and united with other harve hearts started immediately to meet and cut off the enemy.
